Promoter versus mutational activation of cyclin A expression determines cell-cycle control. The product of the cyclin A gene (cyc A) is a G1/S-specific cyclin which is required for the transition of quiescent fibroblasts into the G1/S phase of the cell cycle. In this report we show that expression of the cyc A gene can be induced either positively or negatively by growth factor stimulation of quiescent cells. When the cells are placed in culture the homologous receptor for platelet-derived growth factor, PDGF, is found constitutively in complex with the cyclin A promoter region in unstimulated cells. In agreement with the positive role of PDGF, the level of cyc A mRNA transcripts increases upon PDGF stimulation. In contrast, epidermal growth factor (EGF) does not modulate the basal level of cyc A transcripts but enhances the rate of amplification of cyc A mRNA during the G1 phase in response to PDGF stimulation. The basal level of cyc A transcripts is increased approximately 20-fold by oncogene-mediated transformation. The potential role of the oncogene-driven increase in cyc A expression in the development of the neoplastic phenotype is discussed.
