Vito's father, Lucky, was a mobster who had been trained by the American Mafia. Lucky wanted Vito to follow in his footsteps, but Vito's mother, Bruna, found out about his father's connections with the Mafia and wanted the boy to join the clergy instead. He was sent to a religious boarding school run by Joseph Bonanno, the head of the New York City Mafia. Bonanno taught Vito to avoid trouble, how to survive as a criminal, and how to be a good man. When Vito returned to Sicily, he asked his father to give up his criminal dealings. Lucky resisted, insisting that the two families should remain enemies. Things escalated quickly, and Vito, who had always lived in fear, was forced to fight several of his father's friends and associates. Lucky ordered Vito to carry out the killings, but the boy was in terror of the prospect of what he considered to be murder. He fled to America, where he met his future wife, some years later. Vito then decided to become a legitimate businessman. He became the head of the crime family of New York City, the Corleone family. He came up against a rival, the Gambino family, led by Carlo Gambino and Paul Castellano. The two families fought for New York and moved drug money to South America. They made peace with each other, but the rivalry between the two families continued. On December 4, 1972, Cor
