The route of micropuncture was peripheral, but we also measured the activity of the enzymes that degrade these markers in peritubular capillary blood in order to minimize the potential for tubular back-leakage of the markers. Although all animals were under chloralose anesthesia the measured values showed a normal distribution. The inulin and PAH recovery rates were 21.8 ± 3.9 and $11.2 \pm 3.2\%$ of the simultaneously collected arterial blood concentration respectively. The absolute reabsorption was $57.7 \pm 3.6\%$ for inulin and $13.5 \pm 2.2\%$ for PAH. The renal clearance was 66.3 ± 2.7 and 20.1 ± 3.0 ml/min/100 g for inulin and PAH respectively. The tubular extraction was 60.6 ± 3.2 for inulin and $17.1 \pm 1.7\%$ for PAH. When compared with previous studies we found that the recovery rates were similar but the absolute and fractional reabsorption and tubular extraction were different. The reason for the difference is unclear, but it could be related to the low absolute and fractional reabsorption and tubular extraction found in the previous studies.
