You can use Lightroom's Master Collection feature to export a selection of images at once, and easily adjust any photos that are in the wrong color space. Adobe's new Content-Aware Fill feature makes cropping, laying out photos, and merging new layers an easier task. If you have a local copy of your image, the software can create new layers from different similar areas of the image to help you achieve a perfect fit. It can even search for a human face, or a similar geometric object, in your image, and duplicate it, locating the face or object in your photo and resizing it to fit an area of a new layer. With Camera Raw in Photoshop CC, you can easily correct exposure, color, and more with a few clicks. In fact, PP all the photos in a project for you, so you can correct just one at a time, or zoom in to see just what you need to fix.
