When I first started looking to upgrade my Adobe Photoshop CC installation to Lightroom 5, I knew I wanted to get a new computer in general. However, when I considered the fact that I primarily use the software on my desktop Mac Pro (running OS X 10.10.5), I felt that my desktop machine was perfect as it was. So off to the Apple store I went to see what the new machine was all about. The iPad Pro came to the forefront. In fact, it is the only standard full-sized PC laptop that I've ever considered. While it's true that the iPad Pros and Mac Pros are very similar laptops, there's no doubt that the iPad Pro is far superior to every other laptop that's been on the market in the past. And when I got my hands on the two devices, I felt the same way. The iPad Pro feels so good in the hand. It's light, yet sturdy, and a joy to use. Of course, I couldn't take the iPad Pro back to the store without having a look at the new Adobe Photoshop CC. When presented with the software on the new iPad Pro device, I was immediately impressed. It was fast. It was fluid. It was as intuitive as it was when I used Photoshop on my desktop Mac. The graphic design process is an impressive one-way ride. When it comes to graphic design or photo editing running on the iPad Pro, Adobe Photoshop CC feels snappy. The user interface is structured, easy to navigate, and provides the same amount of powerful tools that you're used to on the desktop. It's a dream. But what was even more impressive to me is that, in spite of the fact that the iPad Pro is still in its earliest developmental stages, I didn't miss any of the desktop-based shortcuts, tools, or menus that I've become accustomed to over the years.
